June 2–14, 2019
University of Virginia School of Law • Charlottesville, Virginia

The Most Recognized National Security Law Program of its Kind in the Nation

Over Thirty National Security Law Topics
Over Twenty Subject Matter Experts

Advanced training in National Security Law for professors of law and political science, government officials, and practitioners.

Comments from participants:

“I have never attended a course that I have enjoyed as much. This high-level, unique, course is an absolute must for anyone who practices, teaches, and cares about National Security Law.”
An Israeli participant.

“The scope of the material covered presented a full spectrum of national security-related legal matters. The Institute taught me as much about being an effective government lawyer as it did the current state of the law.”
A Canadian participant.

“This was the most relevant course that I’ve ever taken in terms of National Security Law. All presentations were provided by the highest level of professionals in their respective areas of expertise. I will certainly recommend this Institute to my colleagues in the government agency in which I work.”
A Mexican participant.

“This Institute was a unique opportunity to experience significant academic growth. It was two weeks of no-less-than perfect organization, logistics, learning, and hospitality. Be assured that I will spread the word regarding what you have very rightly called ‘the best program of its kind in the United States.’”
A U.S. participant.

For information concerning the Institute and how to apply for the 2019 program, visit the National Security Law Institute website:

cnsl.virginia.edu/nslinstitute